

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Stephen J. Tonsor, professor of European intellectual history at the University of Michigan, is the author of Tradition and Reform in Education. He has published widely in both scholarly and popular journals, and is regarded nationally as a principal spokesman of conservatism.

M. E. Bradford, professor of English at the University of Dallas, has written for Modern Age for a decade. He is the author of A Better Guide Than Reason: Studies in the American Revolution, and is presently finishing God's New Messiah: A Critical View of Abraham Lincoln, with Thomas H. Landers, for Arlington House.

Frederick D. Wilhelmsen is professor of philosophy and politics at the University of Dallas. A frequent contributor to Modern Age, he is the author of ten books the most recent of which are Christianity and Political Philosophy and Citizen of Rome.

Richard J. Bishirjian is professor of political science at the College of New Rochelle, and an editorial advisor of Modern Age; he is also presently associated with Columbia University's Southern Asia Institute. His most recent publication is The Development of Political Theory: A Critical Analysis.

Melvin I. Urofsky is professor of history and chairman of the department at Virginia Commonwealth University. His books include We Are One!, A Mind of One Piece: Brandeis and American Reform, and a five-volume edition of Letters of Louis D. Brandeis.

Sergei Levitzky was professor of Russian at Georgetown University until his retirement in 1974. He is the author of The First Principles of an Organic Philosophy and The Tragedy of Freedom.

David Levy is lecturer in sociology at Middlesex Polytechnic in Enfield, England. His articles have appeared in England, France, Germany and the United States; at present he is preparing a book, Thought and Order.

Richard Miller is a writer presently pursuing graduate studies in the history and philosophy departments at Trinity College in Dublin.

Frank R. Harrison is professor of philosophy at the University of Georgia. He is the author of Deductive Logic and Descriptive Language and has contributed to many scholarly journals in such areas as philosophy of religion, philosophy of mind, ethics, and social criticism.

William F. Rickenbacker, member of the editorial board of Modern Age and a contributing editor of National Review, has written six books and is a nationally syndicated columnist.

The book reviews are contributed by: Arthur Kemp, Charles M. Stone professor at the graduate school of the Claremont Colleges; Stephen J. Tonsor, professor of history, University of Michigan; Ralph de Toledano, nationally syndicated columnist, author and lecturer; Douglas K. Adie, professor of economics, Ohio University; Hugh Mercer Curtler, chairman, department of philosophy, Southwest State University; George McKenna, professor of political science, City College of the City University of New York; Henry McDonald, a writer who lives in Washington, D.C.; Francis Russell, an author residing in Sandwich, Massachusetts; Henry M. Adams, emeritus professor of history, University of California, Santa Barbara; J. David Hoeweler, Jr., professor of history, University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee; Charles D. Murphy, emeritus professor of English, University of Maryland; Raymond Thorberg, a literary scholar who has written on Henry James in previous issues of Modern Age; Richard Hsiuh Yang, professor of Chinese studies, Washington, University St. Louis, Missouri.