

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

- Russell Kirk*, the author of twenty-three widely acclaimed books, is president of two foundations and director of the social science program at the Educational Research Council of America. His work, The Roots of American Order, is being made into a series of thirteen television films. His article in this issue was first delivered as a lecture before The Heritage Foundation in February of this year, in Washington, D.C.
- Sam J. Ervin, Jr.*, former U.S. Senator from North Carolina, is well-known for his role in the Watergate hearings, but undeservedly lesser known for his years as chairman of the Senate Subcommittees on Separation of Powers and on Constitutional Rights, which were concerned with the rights of individual privacy and judicial usurpation of the legislative authority and functions.
- Randall R. Rader* is counsel for the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution. He also served for several years as Legislative Counsel for Congressman Philip M. Crane (R., Ill.), and has authored a number of articles on constitutional and economic subjects.
- C. P. Ives* has been a contributor to Modern Age for some twenty years; he is book review editor of Studies in Burke and his Time.
- Stephen Tonsor*, professor of intellectual history at the University of Michigan, is widely regarded as a principal spokesman for American conservatism. He has been associate editor of Modern Age since 1969 and a contributor to this journal for more than two decades.
- Reney Myers* is professor of English at Middlesex College in New Jersey. He has published, with a collaborator, a translation of the works of Catullus with Dutton and Company in New York and George Allen and Unwin in London.
- J. David Hoeveler, Jr.* is associate professor of history at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee. He is the author of The New Humanism: A Critique of Modern America, 1900-1940 and James McCosh and the Scottish Intellectual Tradition, from Glasgow to Princeton.
- Ralph T. Eubanks*, professor of rhetoric at the University of West Florida, is co-author of Language Is Sermonic, a major study of the late Richard M. Weaver's rhetorical theory. His articles on rhetoric and criticism have been widely published, and a number of his public addresses have been carried in Vital Speeches of the Day.
- E. C. Pasour, Jr.* is professor of economics and business at North Carolina State University. His articles have appeared in economic journals and, among others, in The Intercollegiate Review, Reason Papers, The Journal of Libertarian Studies, and The Freeman.
- The book reviews and rejoinder are contributed by:* Peter J. Stanlis, professor of English, Rockford College; Murray N. Rothbard, professor of economics, Polytechnic Institute of New York and associate of the university seminar on the history of legal and political thought at Columbia; William H. Peterson, Scott L. Probasco Jr. Professor of Free Enterprise and director of the Center for Economic Education, University of Tennessee, Chattanooga; J. Brooks Colburn, a corporate writer who, for several years, was a professor of philosophy; J. W. Cooke, professor of history, Tennessee State University; George McKenna, associate professor of political science, City College of The City University of New York; Stephen I. Gurney, assistant professor of English, Bemidji State University; Hugh Mercer Curtler, chairman, department of philosophy, Southwest State University, Marshall, Minnesota; Richard B. Hovey, author of two well received books on John Jay Chapman and Ernest Hemingway; Philip F. Lawler, managing editor of Policy Review; Edward E. Ericson, Jr., book review editor of Christianity and Literature, and professor of English, Calvin College; Anthony Kerrigan, translator-in-residence, University of Notre Dame; Thomas Molnar, professor of French literature at The City University of New York and professor of European and intellectual history at C. W. Post College; John Russell, professor of English, University of Maryland; Paul Gottfried, professor of history, Rockford College.