

Notes on Contributors

Gilmer W. Blackburn is director of graduate studies and professor of history at Gardner-Webb College in Boiling Springs, North Carolina. He received his Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Blackburn is the author of Education in the Third Reich: A Study of Race and History in Nazi Textbooks (1985).

Robert Drake, professor of English at the University of Tennessee, is the author of a family memoir, The Home Place (1980), and four books of stories: The Single Heart (1971), The Burning Bush (1975), Amazing Grace (1980), and Survivors and Others (1987), which, like others of Drake's works, contains writings previously published in Modern Age.

Dante Germino teaches political theory at the University of Virginia. A native North Carolinian, he has written Beyond Ideology: The Revival of Political Theory (1967) and Political Philosophy and the Open Society (1982). He has also written over forty scholarly articles.

Frederick Glaysher, since last appearing in the pages of Modern Age, has published essays and reviews in The Hillsdale Review, Continental Drifter, Cross Currents, and the Saul Bellow Journal. He is now preparing for publication a volume of poems, Into the Ruins, and also a collection of essays, The Grove of the Eumenides. He is now working on a book-length narrative poem, The Bower of Nil.

Anthony Harrigan is the author, co-author, and editor of thirteen books. His articles have appeared in many professional journals in the United States, Britain, France, and other countries.

Mark C. Henrie was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1987. He is currently completing an M.Phil. thesis at Cambridge University and will return to the United States this autumn to begin graduate study in political theory at Harvard.

Stanley L. Jaki, a Hungarian-born Catholic priest of the Benedictine Order, is Distinguished Professor at Seton Hall University, South Orange, New Jersey. With doctorates in theology and physics, he has for the past thirty years specialized in the history and philosophy of science. The author of twenty-five books and over seventy articles, he has served as Gifford Lecturer at the University of Edinburgh and as Fremantle Lecturer at Balliol College, Oxford. Membre correspondant of the Académie Nationale des Sciences, Belles-Lettres et Arts of Bordeaux, he is the recipient of the Lecomte du Noüy Prize for 1970 and of the Templeton Prize for 1987.

Russell Kirk, the founding editor of Modern Age, now serves as editor of the quarterly University Bookman, president of The Educational Reviewer, Inc., and president of the Marguerite Eyer Wilbur Foundation. He is the author of twenty-six books, the best-known of which, The Conservative Mind (1953), has been a major influence in altering America's climate of opinion. Kirk's most recent work is The Wise Men Know What Wicked Things Are Written on the Sky (1987).

Jerome A. Miller is professor of philosophy at Salisbury State University. He was awarded first prize by Washington and Jefferson College in an international essay competition on the existence of God. His book, The Geography of Crisis: An Essay on Human Suffering, will be published by Georgetown University Press in the summer of 1988.

Frank Mocha, born in formerly German Silesia, and a veteran of World War II Polish Armed Forces in Poland, France, North Africa, and England, including P.O.W. camps in Alsace, Bavaria, and Austria, was educated in Poland, England, and in the United States. He holds a doctorate from Columbia in Slavic Literatures and is the author of several works on Polish-Russian literary relations. Mocha has taught at the University of Pittsburgh, New York University, University of Illinois, and Loyola University of Chicago.

Thomas Molnar is professor of French literature at the City University of New York and professor of European literature at C. W. Post College. The holder of an honorary doctorate from the University of Mendoza, he was also awarded the Silver Medal of the City of Nice for excellence in political thought. Molnar has written numerous books and contributes to many of the serious reviews in America and France. His latest work, The Pagan Temptation (1987), will be shortly followed by Twin Powers, Politics and the Sacred.

Russell Nieli is currently working as a part-time lecturer in the Department of Politics at Princeton University. He received his B.A. degree from Duke University, where he was a student of John Hallowell, and both his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Princeton. He has taught at the College of New Rochelle, Valparaiso Univer-

- sity, and Rider College, and has contributed numerous articles to a variety of journals. He is the author of Wittgenstein: From Mysticism to Ordinary Language (1987).
- Gerhart Niemeyer*, though now professor emeritus of government, is still active as a part-time teacher at Notre Dame. He also is Canon Niemeyer at the Episcopal Cathedral of St. James in South Bend, Indiana. A book of his essays, Aftersight and Foresight, was published this year by the University Press of America.
- James Patrick* has taught at Nashotah House and at the University of Tennessee; he served as a dean at the University of Dallas before becoming director of the Saint Thomas More Institute in Fort Worth in 1981. Patrick is the author of The Magdalen Metaphysicals: Orthodoxy and Idealism at Oxford, 1901-1945 (1985).
- James F. Pontuso* is an assistant professor of political science at Hampden-Sydney College in Virginia. He has written articles for The Political Science Reviewer, Survey, and Teaching Political Science, among others.
- Mark J. Rozell* is assistant professor of political science at Mary Washington College, Fredericksburg, Virginia. Rozell received his Ph.D. in 1987 at the University of Virginia, where he was a Richard M. Weaver Fellow. He is the author of a forthcoming book, The Press and the Carter Presidency.
- Claes G. Ryn* is professor of politics and former chairman of the Department of Politics at The Catholic University of America. His current research as well as much of his published writing explores and defends the possibility of value-centered historicism. Among his books are Democracy and the Ethical Life (1978) and Will, Imagination and Reason (1986). He is chairman of The National Humanities Institute.
- Glenn N. Schram*, associate professor of political science at Marquette University, majored in journalism as an undergraduate at Indiana University (from which he also has the Ph.D. in political science). He is the author of Toward a Response to the American Crisis (1982), praised by Gerhart Niemeyer as "a work of real substance and merit."
- Stephen J. Tonsor* is professor of history at the University of Michigan and an associate editor of Modern Age. He lectures on European intellectual history and historiography and is the author of important studies on education, conservatism, neo-conservatism, national socialism, and the idea of equality, as well as of numerous articles and reviews in both popular and scholarly journals.
- James W. Tuttleton*, professor of English at New York University, is the author of The Novel of Manners in America (1972) and Thomas Wentworth Higginson (1978) and has edited many of the works of Washington Irving. His critical essays have appeared in journals like The American Scholar, American Literature, Commentary, The New Criterion, and Modern Fiction Studies.
- Frederick D. Wilhelmsen* is professor of philosophy and politics at the University of Dallas. He is the author of fourteen books—ten in English and four in Spanish—as well as some two hundred and fifty articles and monographs. A longtime contributor to Modern Age, Wilhelmsen was also a founding and senior editor of the now defunct magazine Triumph.
- René Williamson* is a retired chairman of the Department of Political Science at Louisiana State University with specialization in political theory, comparative government, and international law. He held professorships at Princeton University, Davidson College, Beloit College, and the University of Tennessee, as well as visiting professorships at numerous American colleges and universities and at the University of Napal in Durban, South Africa. From 1949 to 1953 he was editor of the Journal of Politics, and from 1959 to 1960 he was president of the Southern Political Science Association. He is the author of five books, including Independence and Involvement (1964) and Politics and Protestant Theology (1976).